A.J.C. Gives Scrolls To 10 Rabbis Arrested In Georgia

The efforts to eliminate religious practices and end segregation in the public schools are "part of the same struggle to preserve the Bill of Rights as the basic guarantee of American liberty," an official of the American Jewish Congress, Shad Polier, chairman of the agency's National Governing Council, said in an address at a luncheon honoring ten rabbis who had been arrested for taking part in anti-segregation demonstrations in Albany, Georgia, says the New York Times. The meeting was held in Stephen Wise Congress House, 15 East 84th Street, in New York.

Congress leaders presented scrolls to the rabbis, citing their "courage, devotion to liberty, and fulfillment of the teachings of our prophets."

A report to the Council took issue with editorials in America, the Jesuit weekly, which suggested that anti-Semitism might result if Jewish groups continued their campaign to oppose religious practices in the schools. Ephraim S. London, the lawyer, who made the report, pledged that the Congress would not abandon its effort to keep sectarian practices out of public schools.

The Jesuit magazine, which is published in New York, ran a series of letters praising it and criticizing it for its editorial "To Our Jewish Friends." It also ran a "P.S." editorial in which the editors said: "We draw the curtain on our part in this debate."

Their chief concern, the editors said, had been to point out that the big Jewish 'Defense' agencies" do not speak for Jews in general when they campaign to keep religious practices out of the public schools, says the New York Times. The editorial concluded:

"Yes, there has been a lot of static, but our message got through. We now withdraw from the fray — bloodied but unbowed — bloodied a bit, in a worthy cause, but unbowed. Today our purpose remains what it was four weeks ago, when we set out to speak the truth in charity 'To Our Jewish Friends.'"

Swiss Bill To Lift Banks Secrecy Law Will Aid Jewish Victims Of German Nazis

The National Council, lower house of the Swiss Parliament in Bern, approved a bill to lift the Banks Secrecy Law for the benefit of Jewish victims of Nazi Germany. The bill was adopted by a vote of 87 to four. It will now go for final action to the Council of States, or upper house, where its passage is considered certain.

The aim of the measure is to obtain an inventory of all assets that have lain unclaimed in Switzerland since the end of World War II., the owners of which can be presumed to have been "victims of racial, religious or political persecution," says the New York Times. If the owners or their heirs cannot be traced within a year, unclaimed assets are to be placed in a special fund.

Dr. Nehemiah Robinson, an official of the World Jewish Congress, in New York, which has been interested in the recovery of assets hidden in Swiss banks, explained to the New York Times some of the complex procedures involved in the bill that had been approved.

He mentioned for instance, a provision to the effect that if the owners or their heirs cannot be traced within a year, the unclaimed assets will be placed in a special fund. The one-year period referred "only to the lapse of time between the appointment of a custodian and the start of the proceedings to declare the owner missing," Dr. Robinson said.

He added that, "if the death of the owner is certain, or he was declared missing, the inheritance procedure is opened."

"Thus," Dr. Robinson said, "there will be much more time than one year for the owner, and particularly his heirs, to appear. Only if no heirs appear in the inheritance proceedings, will the assets be allocated to the fund, which means a further delay."

Another bill to be placed before the Swiss Parliament next year will give details of how the fund will operate. It is expected that in general it will be used to support Jewish rehabilitation and resettlement projects, says the New York Times. Most of the assets expected to be uncovered are thought to have been hidden in the 1930's during the rise of Hitlerism. Jews in Germany of that time sought to avoid arbitrary confiscation.

The chairman of the National Council's committee that studied the bill told the Council that it was impossible to estimate the sums that may be brought to light.

An estimate by the Swiss Bankers Association after a survey of its members and insurance companies put the amount at less than 1,000,000 francs, or about $233,000. Jewish spokesmen have termed this estimate "ridiculously low."

Bankers will have to divulge funds held in secret numbered accounts and open safe deposit boxes if they merely suspect that the unheard-from owners come within the measure's definitions. Similarly, insurance companies, lawyers and all other custodians of the sought-for assets will have to declare them even if bound to their clients by professional secrecy.

Any failure to declare assets involved will be punishable by a fine of up to 10,000 francs ($2,872) or imprisonment.

While the banks first opposed the lifting of their secrecy, they subsequently decided not to oppose the bill because of its humanitarian aim. In the day's debate, in Bern, a Socialist Deputy emphasized Switzerland's obligation "to remove any suspicion that she seeks to profit from the assets left behind by these victims" of persecution.

Jewish organizations have actively sought such a measure since the end of the war, says the New York Times. A spokesman for a Swiss Jewish organization hailed the National Council's vote as "very satisfying."

Works Of Realist Painter Showed Great Vigor And Color

Abel George (Buck) Warshawsky, aged 78, the realist painter whose works hang in numerous galleries in Europe and the United States, died of a heart attack in his home at Monterey, Cal.

Mr. Warshawsky was an artist to label. His colourful city scenes and landscapes and sensitive portraits inclined toward the romantic, the sentimental and the picturesque, says the New York Herald Tribune. But his short, muscular body and broken nose seemed more fitting to a boxer (which he once was) than to an immensely talented artist who had lived much of his life on the Left Bank of Paris.

He was born in Sharon, Pa., son of a Russian immigrant who distributed sacramental wines. Educated at the Cleveland School of Art in Ohio and the National Academy of Design in Paris, he fought in the French Army in World War I. Between the two world wars, he made his home in France.

Mr. Warshawsky's pilgrimage, done during the interval, were many, and his New York showings were well received. In the 20s and 30s, when he was at the height of his fame, he was a popular subject for newspaper interviews.

He needed little prompting to produce usable quotations, and his discourse ranged afield. American men were "effeminate" and women were "anxious to become masculine," and the murals in government buildings in Washington were "awful stuff."

He always had something complimentary to say about his native land, however, and promised he would return "for good." American prosperity, he said, gave his country's middle class a better artistic taste than the European bourgeoisie possessed. And he loved New York — "the most beautiful city with the most beautiful women in the world."

His work reflected the vigor and enthusiasm that were his chief personal traits. Scenes of French flower markets and views of Manhattan buildings were all filled with the shimmering vitality he found in himself and in his world.

The French government decorated Mr. Warshawsky with the Chevalier of the Legion of Honor in 1933. In 1938, after more than 25 years' residence in France, he returned to live in the United States. He was a member of the Academy of Jewish Arts and Sciences. Survivors include his wife, Mrs. Ruth Tate Warshawsky.

Tragedy In South Fel[illegible] Swearing In Of Goldberg To Replace Frankfurter In High Court

President John F. Kennedy watched the United States Supreme Court open its new term as Arthur J. Goldberg took the oath as a new justice. Ordinarily the swearing-in of a justice is a happy affair, ritualistic and significant mainly to family and friends. So it was when the President watched his first Supreme Court appointee, Byron R. White, take the oath last April.

But the Mississippi tragedy hung in the air of the courtroom, says the New York Times. It was etched on grim faces of the President and his brother, Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy. The Attorney General, who was up all night dealing with the Mississippi crisis, came to the Supreme Court after a few minutes' nap and a shave. The President had had only a few hours' sleep.

Vice President Johnson, Postmaster General J. Edward Day and Justice Goldberg's successor as Secretary of Labor, W. Willard Wirtz, were there also. So were a number of Senators and other distinguished guests.

The presence of the President and other high officials seemed, in the circumstances, to have symbolic significance. It was a reaffirmation of faith in law and in the country's highest expositor of the law.

It was a strange, quiet interlude in a tragic day as the Supreme Court clerk, John F. Davis, first read the archaic language of the President's commission to Justice Goldberg and then administered the judicial oath to him. The new justice swore:

"I, Arthur J. Goldberg, do solemnly swear that I will administer justice without respect to persons, and do equal right to the poor and to the rich, and that I will faithfully and impartially discharge and perform all the duties incumbent on me as associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States according to the best of my abilities and understanding, agreeably to the Constitution and laws of the United States, so help me God."

That made Mr. Goldberg the ninety-fourth Supreme Court justice. The marshal of the court T. Perry Lippitt, escorted Justice Goldberg from the clerk's desk to his seat at the far right-hand side of the bench as the audience sees it, says the New York Times. The President reached up to the bench to shake hands with his appointee. The Attorney General and others followed.

Then the Court began its routine business of admitting lawyers to its bar. There was a momentary chill in the air when two lawyers from Mississippi were moved for admission, but Chief Justice Earl Warren gave them his usual affable greeting.

The Chief Justice made a formal statement announcing with regret the retirement of Justice Felix Frankfurter, whose place Justice Goldberg takes.

"As scholar, teacher, public servant, enlightened critic and member of this Court for almost a quarter of a century," the Chief Justice said, "Justice Frankfurter has already made a contribution to our jurisprudence rarely equaled in the life of our Court.

"Through each of these facets of his long and notable career, he looms large in the history of our country, and we, his colleagues, have been the most favored beneficiaries of his wisdom and fellowship."

The Court also published a letter from the Justices to Justice Frankfurter, and his reply.

Justice Frankfurter used the occasion to call for "disinterestedness" on the part of judges — a theme he has often sounded, says the New York Times. The great issues before the Supreme Court, he said, do not warrant any expectation of "identity of views among the members of the Court, nor even of agreement on the routes of thought by which decisions are reached.

"The nation is merely warranted," he said, "in expecting harmony of aims among those who have been called to the Court. This means pertinacious pursuit of the processes of reason, intellectual disinterestedness, rigorous self-scrutiny to discover, with a view of curbing, every influence that may deflect from such disinterestedness."

Diverted River Jordan Will Be Life Blood To Negev In 1963

The heart of Israel's new $200,000,000 water system is taking shape at Iberias. It is expected to begin operating by the end of 1963. From the outside, the hill of Eshed Kinrot looks no different from other promontories on the rocky Galilean landscape, but in the hollowed-out hill, large artificial caverns are ready to house giant pumps to regulate the flow of Galilean waters to southern Israel.

Sometime between the end of 1963 and the spring of 1964 the hill is scheduled to come to life and begin pumping the precious waters of the Jordan River, the country's life blood, says the New York Times, through a system of canals, tunnels, pipes and reservoir, to supply billions of gallons of water to the parched lands in the Negev.

This will be only the first phase of the project. A few years later the supply of water is expected to be doubled.

Laborers wearing miners' yellow garb and white protective helmets are now putting the finishing touches to subterranean chambers where pumps, valves, and machinery will be installed in the next few months. Outside on the shores of a beautiful lake other workers are engaged in molding sections of large pre-stressed concrete pipeline more than nine feet in diameter to be laid on the lake's bed.

Further east on the Sea of Galilee, boats are rocking gently as divers go down to lay dynamite charges that will blow up the rocks along the line of the projected submarine pipeline.

Several miles to the west of Eshed Kinrot, men and machines are digging a ditch on a hillside to lay giant steel pipes that still

Women's Group Hospital Grants Total $2 Million In 15 Years

Grants totaling more than $2,000,000 (two million dollars) to 70 American hospitals to aid in the treatment and care of cancer patients are reported by the United Order of True Sisters, Inc., Cancer Service, in its survey of fifteen years of activity. Funds for this volunteer project are contributed by members of the United Order of True Sisters, America's oldest national Jewish women's organization, which marks its 116th anniversary this year. The hospitals receiving grants are located in 38 American communities, the report states. Funds for the treatment of cancer patients have also been given to the Tel Hashomer Hospital in Tel Aviv, Israel.

The Cancer Service is the national philanthropic project of the forty-five U.O.T.S., Inc., Lodges throughout the country, which also support local welfare, public health and civic programs to meet the special needs in their communities. The U.O.T.S., Inc. Cancer Service, formed in 1947 after consultation with the United States Public Health Service, now provides a wide variety of equipment for ameliorative service to approximately a quarter of a million patients each year. The survey shows that soon after the Cancer Service was established, its primary concern with the home care of cancer patients moved on to more ambitious projects.

As the first lay organization to subsidize radioactive isotope treatment, it has sponsored numerous grants in support of this expensive therapy for medically indigent cancer sufferers of all races and religions. In addition, gifts have been made regularly for the purchase of special equipment, including radioactive isotope storage suites, as well as for the maintenance of hospital beds and of an isotope laboratory. Grants are also made to provide blood for hospitalized leukemia patients.

U.O.T.S., Inc., Cancer Service also maintains, in outstanding hospitals, gift and loan closets which include cancer home-care equipment such as beds, wheel-chairs, dressings and material for occupational therapy. Mrs. Joseph Winters, of New York, is national president of the United Order of True Sisters, which will hold its annual convention in Baltimore, Maryland, on October 28-30. Mrs. Maurice F. Levien, also of New York, is national chairman of the U.O.T.S., Inc., Cancer Service, at 150 West 85th Street, New York.

BEN-GURION INFURIATES U.S. JEWS WHO REJECT HIS ATTEMPT TO EQUATE JUDAISM WITH NATIONALITY

American Jewish leaders in Jerusalem told Israeli officials bluntly not to equate Judaism with nationality. The statements were made in reply to a speech by Premier David Ben-Gurion that infuriated many American participants at a "dialogue" in Israel on the relationship between the American Jewish community and Israel, says the New York Times. The symposium, was promoted by the American Jewish Congress.

Premier Ben-Gurion said the only things that could save Judaism in the United States were personal ties with Israel, Hebrew education, and a belief in the Messianic vision of national redemption in Israel, and international redemption.

Stanley H. Lowell, chairman of the Commission on Intergroup Relations in New York, replied: "You aren't the only answer to Jewish living, Jewish creativity, and Jewish survival." He agreed with the Premier that nationality groups would assimilate rapidly in the United States, but said this would not affect the Jewish situation.

Mr. Lowell said the argument of Mr. Ben-Gurion was "specious." "They set up a straw man — nationality groups — and knock him down," he said. He asked if they would predict that no religious groups would remain in America in fifty years.

Mr. Lowell, an attorney in his forties, said he spoke for most American Jews of his generation in rejecting the premise that they are Jews by nationality. He said the Israeli leadership rendered a tremendous disservice by urging the immigration of Americans as a group.

"This generation and the next generation and the generations to come shall and will remain part and parcel of the great American experience of democracy," he declared, says the New York Times. Mr. Lowell caused a stir when he said forcefully: "If in the future Israel were to leave the side of Western democracies and join the Soviet bloc in the world-wide division that now exists, American Jewish support of Israel would drop to an infinitesimal portion of what it now is."

Two professors of the Hebrew University in Jerusalem, Ernst Simon and Moshe Davis, objected to the Premier's statements linking the revival of Israel with the fulfillment of the Messianic hope, the expectation of a deliverer of the Jewish people.

But Professor Simon, addressing the Americans, said the Jewish content of their lives was running thinner and thinner. "Jewish intellectuals are on the highest level in the field of scholarship and on the kindergarten level in the Jewish fields," he asserted.

The professor, a critic of the Ben-Gurion Government, said there should be more critical indentification in the relationship of American Jews to Israel. He said the "your county right or wrong" attitude was morally dangerous and obnoxious.

A statement by the Premier that he was concerned only with what other people did about Israel and not what they said, was attacked by Leo Pfeffer, General Secretary of the American Jewish Congress, says the New York Times. He acknowledged that Mr. Ben-Gurion was not legally obliged to justify his actions to other nations, but he said there was a moral obligation.

Oldsmobile For 1963 Is Now On Display, With Complete Restyling

Complete interior and exterior restyling, five sports models, an optional tilt-type adjustable steering wheel and improved safety features are major changes in the 1963 Oldsmobile line, of General Motors of Canada.

Each of the Oldsmobile series — 98, Super 88, Dynamic 88, Starfire and F-85 — bears its own styling characteristics, distinguishing each series from the others. Sweeping changes have been made in body and sheet metal, individualized grilles, rear quarter surfaces and tail lamps, bright metal trim and roof and upper structure design.

Six body styles are offered in the Dynamic 88 series, four in the Super 88, six in the 98 and two in the Starfire range. Eight models are available in the F-85 series.

The Super 88 features Celebrity and Holiday sedans, Holiday coupe and Fiesta station wagon while the 98 offers a four-door sedan with center pillar, a Holiday coupe, four-door Holiday sports sedan, convertible and two new models — the Custom sports coupe and 98 Luxury sedan. The Oldsmobile sports coupe features bucket seats, power console and outstanding manoeuvrability while the new Luxury sedan, a six-window model, features such luxury equipment as built-in door armrests containing controls for electric windows.

The smaller-sized F-85, which is four inches longer yet retains its 112-inch wheelbase for easy handling, offers these models: a new Jetfire hardtop coupe with Turbo-Rocket engine, Cutlass coupe and Cutlass convertible; Deluxe four-door sedan and two-seat station wagon as well as a four-door sedan, two-door coupe and two-seat station wagon in the regular F-85 range. The F-85 Hydra-Matic transmission has been refined to provide smoother shifting. F-85 also has redesigned rear suspension for greatly increased stability and self-adjusting brakes as standard equipment.

Oldsmobile's redesigned instrument panel features a new integrated single-unit control for the operation of heating, ventilating and air-conditioning systems. A more constant temperature control can be maintained under all weather conditions with this new design.

All 1963 Oldsmobiles are equipped with a new door interlock system which increases resistance to door opening under impact conditions. Self-adjusting brakes are standard equipment on all models.

Also new is a "positive pilot" turn signal system to warn the driver should one of the signal lights become inoperative. Front turn-signal lamps are equipped with amber lenses.

The 1963 Pontiac Has Handsome New Styling And Colors; Wide Range Of Models In Each Series

The 1963 Pontiac line of automobiles has been greatly restyled and features a number of new design and engineering improvements, General Motors of Canada announced. Pontiac has a completely new front end with a split grille and twin headlights stacked vertically rather than the customary horizontal arrangement.

A new 230 cu. in. 6-cylinder engine designed for extra efficiency, economy and performance is a Pontiac feature. The engine is 140 pounds lighter, has a 7 main bearing crankshaft and develops 140 horsepower. It is available with three-speed synchro-mesh or the advanced Powerglide transmission that was previously obtainable only with the optional V8 engines.

A handsome steering wheel and instrument panel are interior styling features, along with new color-keyed interior upholsteries in fabric and vinyl. Vinyl headlining is standard on all models except the convertible. The convertible's new tighter-fitting top has a steel adjustable retaining cable running through the top side material and parallel with the side rails to eliminate side flap and reduce top ballooning.

Seventeen Magic-Mirror colors, with 52 two-tone combinations, are available, including eight new colors. Pontiac features a new rocker panel washing and ventilating system.

Pontiac comes in 12 models in three Complete-built series — Strato-Chief four-door sedan, two-door hardtop sedan, two-door sports coupe, two-door convertible, four-door sedan and four-door Safari.

The "Wide-Track" Pontiac series offers a Catalina four-door sedan, sports sedan, sports coupe, Vista, convertible, four-door six-passenger Safari, four-door nine-passenger Safari; Star Chief Vista and four-door sedan; Bonneville sports coupe, Vista, six-passenger Custom Safari and convertible; Grand Prix sports coupe.

The smaller-sized Tempest, which is five inches longer than last year, features a new V8 326 cu. in. engine, comes in two-door sports coupe, four-door sedan, two-door coupe, four-door six-passenger Safari and convertible as well as the custom Le Mans two-door coupe and convertible.

The Pontiac Bonneville features walnut wood inlays in the instrument panel and horn ring and genuine leather on prime surface areas of the convertible's seats. The Grand Prix sports coupe features the industry's first concave rear window and tail lights that are integrated into the rear end panel rather than being located in the fender, thus not noticeable except when in use.

United Hias Locates Kin Of Anguished Girl

"My mother and father, sisters and brothers, and all the other members of my family in Poland were killed twenty years ago when the Germans invaded our country. I was a girl of five at the time, but I remember my parents talking about some of our relatives outside of Poland. Maybe I have an uncle, an aunt, or a cousin who is alive somewhere in the world, and I hope you will be able to help me find them."

This letter is one of the thousands of anguished appeals United Hias Service, the world-wide migration agency, still continues to receive each year from people trying to piece together the past out of the ruins of World War II. Last year alone, the agency's location services in the United States and Israel successfully completed more than 1,700 searches for missing persons. A half-remembered name, a dog-eared photograph, a chance bit of information about long lost relatives, these nebulous clues are often all that the agency's location service has to work with, as it sets wheels turning on a worldwide search for missing persons.

In the case of the inquiry from Poland, there was even less to go on. Nothing in the agency's location files shed any further light on the situation. So a special missing persons notice was sent to the Yiddish press. Two days after the item was printed, the agency had positive proof that a sister was living in the Bronx in New York.

But that was only the beginning. Despite the inquirer's belief that all the members of her immediate family had perished, the agency learned that a brother had survived. He had made his way to Melbourne, Australia, where he was now living with an uncle. The brother, himself, was under the impression that he was the sole survivor of the holocaust in Poland.

Menachem Kraicer, United Hias Service Director in Israel, reported that a young woman in Israel eventually read the missing persons notice in the Yiddish press. It has now been established that she is a cousin. And so a woman in Poland, who for twenty years thought she was alone in the world, has been reunited in spirit with four members of her family; and letters from them keep coming regularly from three continents.

Psychiatrist Deplores Disregard For Advice Of Elders

"We have a seven-year-old son who kicks his father's shins whenever he gets the chance. What should we do about it?" The question was asked of a psychiatrist, who confessed that he was stunned — not by the complexity of the question, but because it was asked at all, says the New York Times. "I was flabbergasted to suddenly realize that we must have gone through very crazy times when a parent would ask a psychiatrist what to do with a child who was clearly misbehaving," Dr. Maurice Linden recently told a meeting of the Manhattan Society for Mental Health.

The psychiatrist is director of the division of Mental Health of the Philadelphia Department of Health and Assistant Professor of Psychiatry at the University of Pennsylvania Medical School.

He was similarly amazed by a question asked by a young mother at a P.T.A. meeting. She was worried because her husband could hardly wait to get home from work to play with their seven-month-old son.

"What's the problem?" Dr. Linden asked. "Fathers have been doing just that for millions of years." After some prodding, the mother revealed her fear that such fondling might turn her son into a homosexual.

In both instances, the psychiatrist said the mothers would have been better off if they had never attended a mental health lecture or read an article on child-rearing. They would have been better parents if they had relied on their own instincts, he said.

Unfortunately, some parents have become so intimidated by the "experts" that they feel they must check a reference book before spanking or hugging a child, Dr. Linden said. Their self-doubts are likewise fed by Sunday supplements that give check lists on how to measure oneself as "a good parent, a good worker, a good lover—a good everything," the psychiatrist said.

Small wonder, Dr. Linden asserted, that the naturalness of parents has been replaced by a "hesitant, faltering artificiality."

If parents are playing Hamlet, grandparents are playing King Lear. In bygone days, the experience of elders was highly valued. Their advice was eagerly sought at family councils that were convened when trouble brewed. Today, the family's elders are largely disregarded, the psychiatrist said, reports the New York Times. Why turn to the elders when one can obtain "expert" advice outside the family circle?

Ironically, many of these experts, Dr. Linden added, publicly lament the decline of authority and leadership within today's families.

Brights FINE CANADIAN Wines
SINCE 1874

At your sabbath table, a decanter of wine is as much at home as a challah.

No wine is more welcome in Jewish homes in Canada than Mazel Tov, a wine made from Concord grapes grown on the sunny slopes of the Niagara Peninsula.

Mazel Tov is ruby red in colour, and richly sweet—but not cloying—to the taste. It's a wine you'll "remember", the kind of wine that you used to taste many years ago.

Mazel Tov, made 'Kosher l'Pesach' under strict rabbinical supervision, is available throughout the year for every 'simcha'.

Who Deprives You Of Your Rights?

The High Holy Day Message of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, in New York

You have the right to think and speak your mind,
the right to have a family,
the right to choose where to live,
the right to work,
the right to a good life,
the right to worship God.

We all realize how much these, and many other of our deepest rights, are threatened from many parts of the world, today. And we're ready to struggle in every way possible to protect our rights from being taken from us by others.

Yet we don't always see how the security and enjoyment of our rights can be taken from us . . . by ourselves! Let us examine some of the inevitable reasons for this:

There is no way, for example, to enjoy our right to a family, without fulfilling our duty to care for our children. For how can anyone expect to get fulfillment and pleasure from his children . . . if they are not raised well?

It is no different with other rights. All experience, history and tradition make clear that no right stands alone. We can enjoy a right only by accepting the duty which is its other side.

The right to think and speak our mind

This is inseparable from our duty to listen: to give those around us the same rights of expression we want so much for ourselves. When we do not listen, how we can expect others to let us speak?

The right to have a family

We make this right empty and meaningless if we keep postponing the time we spend with our own family. It is a familiar delusion to think that our greatest duty to our family is to provide those we love with material security, however important this may be. They need our presence and our active love still more.

The right to choose where to live

Whenever we self-righteously complain and discriminate against our neighbors . . . whenever we toll our duties as a good neighbor . . . we undermine the very foundation of our rights to choose where to live.

The right to work

In the complexities of modern society, each of us has the right to earn a living for himself and his family, in ways consistent with his talents. But we fail our duty when we do not give, to whatever we do, a full measure of integrity and effort. And in failing this duty we defeat our right to work.

The right to a good life

No one can "give" us a good life. We are given only the opportunity; there still remain our duty and actions to achieve it. And we advance ourselves whenever we decide to reflect for a time, rather than to keep rushing through life; whenever we decide to give ourselves to a community action instead of limiting ourselves to giving only money; whenever we decide to seek wisdom from those who can teach us . . . and don't put off the reading of a book.

The right to worship God

We see everywhere how much the evil in human affairs comes from the tendency to mistake a part of life — power or status or possessions — for the whole of it. We can make the same error in our beliefs. For our right to worship God is also our duty not to fall into the idolatry of worshiping any part of His creation as though it were the whole.

It is clear, then, that to enjoy our rights we must fulfill our duties.

They are the only path to the full possession of our rights. Moreover, we can be sure of living in a society where each individual's rights are insured only when we achieve a society where all are concerned with their duties. And only then!

DIVERTED RIVER JORDAN

siphon water down the valley and up the hill again. Still farther west and south is the triangular concrete-lined open canal to carry water several additional miles.

Tunnels hewn in rock, reservoirs, and finally the main southbound conduit 168 inches in diameter already laid along most of its 65-mile trajectory, complete the "Jordan diversion." Nearly 3,000 workers are employed in the project, probably the largest of its kind ever undertaken in Israel.

To Israelis the project is a purely beneficial enterprise to increase irrigation, extend farming and expand industry. But in some Arab capitals the project is regarded as an affront, says the New York Times. The Arabs have repeatedly threatened armed intervention to prevent the diversion.

Canadian Zionists Are Ready To Share With Israel Its Responsibility For Jewish Creative Survival

BY LAWRENCE FREIMAN, OF OTTAWA, PRESIDENT OF THE ZIONIST ORGANIZATION OF CANADA; AND OF THE UNITED ZIONIST COUNCIL OF CANADA

As we prepare for the New Year 5723, we should pause and against the hopes and expectations which we brought with us into the dying year, measure our achievements during the past twelve months. In Canada, where we continue to enjoy the blessings and opportunities of life in a free, democratic country, we have shared the concerns and the joys of our fellow citizens of all races and creeds, and we have joined with all Canadians in every effort to maintain those values which are the foundation and the pinnacle of the Canadian way of life.

Within the opening weeks of the New Year, we shall hold the Diamond Jubilee Convention of the Zionist Organization of Canada, and by all indications this will be one of the biggest and best conventions in the history of our Movement. It is indeed a source of gratification and pride to all Zionists in Canada that at a time when the Zionist Movement in some quarters is under heavy attack, we confidently expect a public response to our convention which will demonstrate that in this country the Zionist Movement is very much alive and one of the great constructive forces in Jewish life.

Perhaps the most significant development on the Zionist scene in Canada has been the growing participation by our Movement in Hebrew education, and I am confident that we stand on the threshold of important new activities in this field.

Adolph Eichmann's execution has almost been forgotten by now, and it is right that this should be so, because the reason for his trial was not to visit retribution on a man who had callously and coldbloodedly sent millions to an agonizing death, but to impress on Jews the magnitude of the tragedy that overwhelmed millions of our own flesh and blood, and to remind the world of the appalling consequences of race hatred. I believe that the Eichmann trial has also broadcast to the nations that in this modern world of deep hostilities and moral chaos, justice has not yet perished and still survives.

Adolph Eichmann is dead, but anti-Semitism still lives in some countries in the world and the fate of our brethren in parts of North Africa and Latin America remains a matter of great anxiety to us. We are conscious of the ties that bind us to Jews everywhere and recognize that in many vital respects, we share a common destiny. The fight for tolerance and understanding among all men is one to which every Zionist must bend his whole energy.

The lot of those of our fellow Jews in the Soviet Union who wish to be free to practise their faith and unite for this purpose with their fellow Jews elsewhere in the Soviet and in the rest of the world, has not improved in the past year. We shall pray that they may be granted in the coming year the same right to live a full and free Jewish life as we enjoy in our own democratic Canada.

In the past year, thousands of Jews driven from their ancestral homes by physical violence or deprivation of dignity and security, have found new hope and new opportunity in Israel, the State to which our historic Zionist Movement gave birth. It is a matter of reassurance and pride to us that the doors of Israel stand wide open to all Jews who seek its sheltering beneficence and a chance to participate personally in one of the great adventures of the human mind and spirit. We look back with pleasure on Israel's efforts in the past year, not only on behalf of its own citizens and immigrants to its shores, but on behalf of underdeveloped countries of the world. It is symbolic of the noblest ideals of our Jewish heritage that this little State should be willing to exert itself so strenuously in the fight everywhere against hunger, want, and oppression.

As Canadian Zionists, we accept a responsibility to help in the struggle for the survival of the Jewish people, both physically and spiritually, and we shall not leave the people of Israel to carry unaided the heavy burdens that they so readily accepted in the cause of Jewish creative survival. We must be ready to take up our share of the burden and we must be prepared for whatever demands may be made on us by the requirements of our cause. We wish to be partners with the people of Israel in these great tasks.

Let us wish ourselves and all men and women everywhere, regardless of race, colour, or creed, a year of peace, cooperation, and progress.

Sukkahs Rise At Military Bases For The Eight-Day Feast Of Tabernacles

A most un-military structure is appearing at U.S. military installations and Veterans Administration hospitals in New York and abroad. At countless Air Force bases, Army posts, and Naval stations, sukkahs are rising to celebrate the eight-day Feast of Tabernacles, the happiest and most colorful festival on the Jewish calendar, which begins at sundown October 12.

Wherever American troops are stationed, including Formosa, Korea, Japan, the Canal Zone, Germany, France, and Turkey, the booths will shelter Jewish men and women who enter to worship. Jewish chaplains have been preparing for the holiday and the tabernacles have taken on a variety of forms to fit local available materials and designs. In building their sukkahs, GI congregations frequently have the help of non-Jewish buddies whose special construction skills and sources of material are of inestimable help.

The "lulav" and "esrog", necessary in the celebration of Sukkos, have been shipped to Jewish chaplains across the world by the National Jewish Welfare Board (JWB), which is the government-authorized agency for religious and morale services to Jewish GIs, their dependents, and hospitalized veterans. JWB also recruits, endorses, and serves Jewish chaplains in all branches of the U.S. Armed Forces, and provides religious materials, literature, and kosher foods for Jewish holidays the year round. It is a member agency of USO and a beneficiary of the United Jewish Appeal of Greater New York.

One location where JWB has not had to ship "esrogim" is the Canal Zone, where Rabbi Nathan Witkin, director of the JWB Servicemen's Club and USO-JWB director, has grown an "esrog" tree from the seeds of fruit obtained in Israel. The Veterans Hospital in Northport, N.Y., has a portable sukkah, built this year by patients, many of them not Jews. The booths may be as solidly constructed as an Engineer Corps bridge, or they may be simple frameworks of wood, but they all are built as ritual requires, open to the sky, without floors and decorated with the fruits and plants of the season. JWB has collected pictures of GI sukkahs of previous years and has sent them to Jewish chaplains for their guidance.

According to tradition, Jews drive the first stake for the sukkah on the evening following Yom Kippur. After the first is broken
